BRAIN DRAIN

Certain details surrounding the death of Albert Einstein are so outlandish as to sound like an urban legend: namely, the theft of his brain by Thomas Stoltz Harvey, the pathologist who performed the eminent physicist's autopsy. From these historical events, Pierre-Henry Gomont concocts a picturesque road trip that is both farcical and moving, whimsical and melancholy, where the FBI, a sanatorium, neurobiology, hallucinogens, hospital bureaucracy, and romance are swept into its whirlwind narrative. Between his dissection of friendship and the forging of scientific reputation, the nimble-fingered cartoonist serves up a slice of lovingly-rendered Americana for the ages. A very strange tale based on very real events.

She was the wrong person at the wrong time, so History chose to forget her. Her name was Claudette Colvin, and this is her story.

MUNICH'S ADVENTURES IN MARCEL DUCHAMP

In 1912, Marcel Duchamp leaves Paris for Munich. He stays in the Bavarian capital for barely 3 months. Upon his return, he creates his first "readymades," which will make him famous and above all, will truly revolutionize 20-century art. And yet, we know next to nothing about his stay in Munich, which he would describe at the end of his life as "the theater of his total liberation." So what happened in Munich? Here, Roman Muradov concocts a visually sublime, over-the-top, and very Duchampian work of fiction in keeping with the spirit of the French artist himself.

In a fanciful land not so different from our own but infused with elements of Grimm's fairy tales, a young man is interviewed by a surly bureaucrat who is compiling a dossier that will determine his fate. The young man relates how he and his sister were forced to flee into exile, facing hardship, abuse, and indifference every step of the way on their voyage to the Other World, where they hoped to find peace and stability. Lurking in the darkness around him, both along the way and in the detention facility where he is being held, ghost-like shadows loom around him that no one else can see. Through the course of the book, the young man learns who they are and how his fate is inextricably bound to their experiences. A subtle tale about exile and refugees today.

Germany, April 1957. Uli dreams of becoming a famous Broadway dancer. A young 19-year-old student at the prestigious school of modern dance, his energetic and outgoing personality stands in sharp contrast to the melancholy of post-war Europe. He adores musicals—joyous and colorful, just like he is—but his classmates ridicule him. For them, musicals are too commercial, nothing like the German tradition of dance. During a trip to Berlin he meets Anthony, a young African-American dancer. The attraction is immediate. In bed, the 2 young men talk about dance, and Anthony tells him to come to New York to discover the reality of musical theatre and try his luck on Broadway. They part ways, but the idea of New York stays with Uli. And a few months later, his bags are packed.

Florence always pretends to laugh, just like everyone else... because she's 13. What does she know about it? Florence's parents never tell her anything about sex. As much as it pains her, she accepts her ignorance at first as the price of belonging to the "second sex." But being submissive, getting married, becoming a self-effacing spouse: that's not how she pictured her life turning out. Instead of ignoring her teenage fears and her emerging sexuality, she is going to have to confront them. An uncompromising autobiographical critique of family and social conventions.

YASMINA (BOOK 1) MASTER CLASS

Alarmed at her schoolmates' eating habits and her school's woeful green credentials, Yasmina decides to take action! She wants to have one hour of English class replaced by a cooking class and one hour of math replaced by a gardening class. But to accomplish this she will need to collect 50 signatures—an almost impossible task, given her schoolmates' indifference toward the environment.
