ARE WE ALONE IN THE UNIVERSE?

Who has never looked up at the sky wishing to uncover the mysteries of alien life? Are we really alone in the universe? This is a question that scientists have been seriously asking themselves ever since the discovery of exoplanets. Nothing prevents us from imagining that other civilizations might exist elsewhere or even here on Earth! In fact, it's very likely. While we're busy looking for traces of faraway life, aliens may have been on Earth for a long time!

GASPARD IN THE NIGHT

Curled up in his bed, Gaspard is trying to fall asleep, but the night intimidates him. Aren't the shadows inhabited? What was that strange noise? He is alone in the darkness, so alone... until a little mouse shows up and offers to help him find a friend. Their quest leads them into every room of the house, where they will meet a strange gallery of characters, who are also prey to various worries, just like Gaspard. But together they will manage to overcome them. A very sensitive book about children's fears, the power of dreams, and friendships that take root without you even noticing.

GURGLES

Billie isn't your average reporter, and it's a good thing, because her new field of investigation is none other than J's digestive system. After entering the young boy's mouth, she takes us with her into the depths of J's organs. What is saliva made of? Why do we burp? How long is the intestine? What is microbiota and why is it so important? What is the best position for going poo? An original book in which science is closely linked to comic imagery to help children discover the functioning of the digestive system.

LITTLE MONKEY

From the "little monkey" who begins his life tightly snuggled up against his mother to the "big cutie" learning how to walk, this book incites us to marvel again and again at the 6 key moments of baby's first year.

With this cloth book, toddlers are invited to revisit all of the important stages in motor skills: being held in their parents' arms, rolling onto their back and tummy, getting up on all fours, sitting, and finally, standing up. Each time, the baby is given an evocative and affectionate animal nickname.

OUR NEIGHBORS THE INSECTS

No need to go into the yard to observe insects! These plentiful little creatures often choose to live inside our homes without our permission. Some seem disgusting, like the little flies that lay eggs on our fruit, the acarids that invade our beds, or the millipede with its legs stuck in the bathtub. Some seem more pleasant, like the ant carrying a big breadcrumb in the kitchen, the ladybird trying to hibernate in the living room, or the butterfly in the attic. But all of them are fascinating...

THAT'S MY HOME!

In the mountains, in the desert, on the ice field... This simple and elegant vocabulary book invites children on a world tour to discover 7 landscapes in relief. With each double-page spread, readers will enjoy finding the animal traditionally associated with the represented landscape: for instance, the wolf in the forest, the scorpion in the desert, or even the man in the city. A book to introduce the youngest of readers to the different landscapes, make them aware of ecological issues, and fill them with wonder.

THE SKY

We travel through different strata of the atmosphere to discover the animals, the machines, and the meteoroids that can be found there and the many meteorological phenomena that heckle our skies. Here is an ascent that allows the reader to recognize the different clouds, to understand pollination or the cycle of day and night, to contemplate the stars and migrating birds, to witness a tornado and an eclipse, but also to become aware of atmospheric and light pollution and of the consequences of human activity. An exceptionally beautiful book featuring cut-outs and flaps.

THE WALL

Caroline Fait's The Wall evokes all walls that have been erected through time and that are omnipresent today throughout the world: in the United States, Hungary, Israel, Korea, Morocco... Whether they are made of concrete or more insidious, they protect, forbid, divide, and seem impassable. The author's simple and true words, like her young character, are beautifully interpreted by Eric Puybaret with an expressionist intensity.
