ALICE ZENITER

An invigorating book about the prospective powers of fiction.

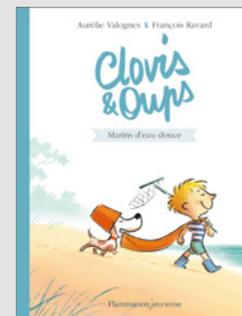

› TOUTE UNE MOITIÉ DU MONDE

A WHOLE HALF OF THE WORLD

To say that fiction lacks representation for a whole half of the world is also to say that it still has this same half of the world to explore. "And that seems to me the most beautiful of agendas," writes Alice Zeniter in this highly stimulating book that draws on her experiences, readings, reflections, and ideas about how to read and write. By turns joyous and serious, Alice Zeniter throws open the doors of fiction to come.

"My name is Clovis and I'm 7 years old. This is Oups, Grandma and Grandpa's dog. I love spending the holidays with my grandparents. They have a little house near the sea, and it's awesome! They let me do all the things that I'm not allowed to do at home - and believe me, that's a LONG list. Maybe that's what grandparents are for: finally being able to do whatever you want!"
