Depending on your country of birth, being born a girl doesn't always mean the same thing...

BORN A GIRL

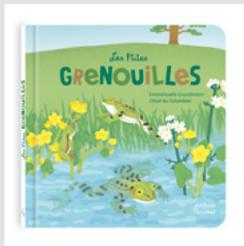

5 girls from 5 different countries describe their transition to adulthood and what it means to be born a girl. They question injustices, violence, and the barriers imposed on them. Each story also features a documentary section that enlightens readers on situations experienced by millions of women. These stories demonstrate the extent to which removing taboos is fundamental so that all girls can enjoy the same freedoms.

LI'L FROGS

Water and frogs are perfect for one another! Thanks to their smooth skin, frogs are veritable swimming champions! But not all of them live in the water; some prefer the forests. To survive the winter months, some of them are even capable of modifying their temperature and heart rate! During mating season, they make themselves heard before mating. The females lay their eggs underwater. Soon, wriggling tadpoles will populate the pond.

WILD FOREST

In the heart of the forest, plants, trees, and animals live in perfect harmony over the course of the seasons. In the springtime, the forest awakens. Little flower and tree shoots pierce the soil and buds swell before blossoming. In the summertime, the tree leaves gorge themselves on the sunlight! Their shade protects a young fawn from predators. The trees change color in the fall and their leaves cover the ground, nourishing the earth. In the wintertime, the plants and little mammals hibernate.
