Shoot the Book!

This event is a SCELFF's (Société Civile des Editeurs de Langue Française) and BIEF's (Bureau International de l'Édition Française) initiative. It is organised by SCELFF, the Ile de France Film Commission, the MOTif (Observatoire du livre et de l'écrit), the Institut Français, and supported by the Centre Français de la Copie, the Sofia and the CNL.

This event will assemble those in charge of film rights in French publishing houses, for the second time in Cannes and in a collective context.

Shoot the Book! is an opportunity for French publishers to present books with strong potential for film adaptation at the Cannes Festival.

Out of 27 participants, 10 publishing houses had the pleasure of seeing their book selected by a jury of professionals working in the film industry.

This event was organised in collaboration with Isabelle Fauvel, director of Initiative Film, Bertrand Moullier, director of Narval Media Ltd, Sophie Balhetchet, British producer, Emma Broughton, book executive at BBC and Cedric Salmon, director and scriptwriter. It will be Moderated by Isabelle Fauvel. The pitch presentation session will be followed by a cocktail at 11.30 am.

www.shoot-the-book.com

Created in 2013 by BIEF and SCELFF, this all-English Internet site is designed to be a bridge between the written word and the image.

Here, film and TV rights managers in French publishing houses can present books they believe to have a strong potential for screen adaptation, at any time of the year.

Thanks to a multi-criteria search engine, film industry professionals visiting the site can select titles by category, key words, characters, period, etc. depending on the project they are working on. They can also leave a message to a group of publishers for more detailed information.

In order to make the site as rich as possible, we are planning further developments such as the creation of an agenda listing all the major film festivals in the world, and a list of professional organisations of producers. Our aim is to make this site an international portal for book-to-film adaptation.

SCELF

The Société Civile des Éditeurs de Langue Française (SCELF) is a collecting society created in 1960. It represents French book publishers and collects adaptation rights from other French collecting societies on behalf of its members. It also has a role of legal advisor to its members. For the past few years, SCELF has been organizing events and partnerships in order to promote film and TV adaptations and develop the publisher's role in the exploitation of authors' rights. Shoot the Book! is the first international event organized by SCELF.

SCELF,

BIEF

Le Bureau international de l'édition française (BIEF) is a non-profit organisation representing 270 publishers. BIEF ensures the collective presence of French publishing in many international book fairs, organizes professional seminars between French and foreign publishers and conducts marketing research in the publishing sector throughout the world.

In cooperation with SCELF, BIEF develops its promotion of French books for film adaptations by proposing professional meetings between publishers and foreign producers, producing catalogues, creating and running an Internet site, shoot-the-book.com. BIEF's office in New-York, The French Publishers' Agency, presents French publishing to American publishers and producers.

Selected books

The background features a series of overlapping, semi-transparent rectangular shapes in various shades of orange and red. These shapes are layered to create a sense of depth and movement, with some appearing to recede into the background while others are more prominent in the foreground. The overall effect is a modern, geometric aesthetic.

The novel begins as the death of Anna Song – a mysterious pianist with a huge discography – is being reported in the specialized press. Anna Song was “the greatest living pianist that no one had ever heard of”. And for good reason: no one had ever seen her in concert.

La double vie d'Anna Song is the story of a passionate love and a musical scam. It is the invention of Anna Song – the mysterious, superbly gifted pianist whose career took place exclusively in the recording studios – by her husband, somewhere between Tristan and Frankenstein. Vengeance, or an attempt to 'compensate' for fate, carried out regardless of the scandal? Paul Desroches' great falsification (his truth) reveals and defends the madness of loving, as well as the right to invent lives worthy of that madness.

Johanna is on an excavation at the site of Cluny Abbey. During a romantic weekend at Mont Saint Michel, she remembers a dream she had as a young girl in which she witnessed a murder by hanging. In it, a headless monk appeared and instructed her to "dig in the earth to reach heaven".

At the Mont, her strange dreams return. In them, Johanna witnesses other murders – which she knows are real even if they happened centuries ago – and the headless monk, always repeating the same injunction.

A thousand years earlier, Roman, master contractor for the building of the Mont's Abbey, is torn between his devotion to God and his love for Moira, a young Celtic Christian accused of heresy and sentenced to be tortured.

It is now up to Johanna to crack the secret that binds Moira and Roman, and solve the murders of both past and present so that the souls of the Mont can finally rest in peace.

Clovis never would have guessed that coming across a masterpiece of classical painting would have such a colossal effect on his life. Completely obsessed by Millet's L'Angélus, he discovers a 45 year-old family secret, and in so doing metamorphoses from an uninspired, gloomy husband into a spirited seducer.

English summary of the series

Clovis is the prototype of an invisible man. Ignored by his wife and children, his lifestyle is reflected in the clothing he wears: plain and grey. Killing time in a museum, he is struck down while standing in front of Millet's L'Angélus. He suddenly becomes completely obsessed by the masterpiece, launching into a quest to discover the reason for his confusion. He finds out that another person – someone famous – shared his obsession with the painting. Dali himself fought for years to decipher the secret of this classic: the two peasants are not praying to get a good harvest but crying over their buried child, as an X-ray reading revealed. Clovis wonders if he is also the morbid extension of a child who died...

The more his family secrets are revealed, the more Clovis frees himself from the straightjacket that was his life. For a man who has always lived in the shadows, it's time to enter the spotlight, finally discovering passion and love!

Between the incredible adventure of a true mystery in the Art world and the introspective quest of a man plagued by his origins, L'Angélus plays on a universal theme: the family secret.

Port-au-Prince, Haiti. Gunfire all night long. Angélique and Joyeuse, two sisters, wait in vain for their brother, Figolé, to come home. Joyeuse discovers a firearm and a paper with scribbles on it among his things. While her sister Angélique goes to her nursing job at the hospital, Joyeuse goes out to look for their brother.

The two women's anxiety brings back a flood of memories. Angélique, single mother feeling betrayed, is metamorphosed into a pious woman. Joyeuse puts her powers of seduction to the test. She's in love with Luckson, a student who once saved her from a riot, but he doesn't feel the same way. At the hospital, Angélique is deeply upset by the death of a wounded patient. She reports Figolé's disappearance to the police who react strangely. Then she learns of her brother's violent death, he was executed during an ambush the day before. Joyeuse decides to leave Luckson and kill the young man who denounced Figolé.

What can Haiti hold for a young woman who becomes an under-age mother after a single night of passion? How can a woman find happiness in love, when the only use of her sex appeal that she understands, is as a weapon to fight for a better future. The Colour of the Dawn paints a portrait of disenchanted Haitian youth, divided between disillusionment and rebellion.

The daily life of divorced history professor Tycho Mercier is disrupted when he wins a prohibited clone of Adolf Hitler at a raffle. His son becomes quickly enamoured of the clone, which he nicknames 'Dolfi'. When, wanting to get rid of his prize, Mercier discovers the fate awaiting prohibited clones is nothing other than annihilation, he is faced with a moral dilemma. Trouble itself comes in series, and Mercier is obliged to host an illegal Marilyn Monroe clone when a neighbour falls victim to a stroke. But Mercier is far from inclined to get rid of her, particularly as she spends every night in his bed. The little community falls into a peaceful routine that continues until the day the police arrive. The clones escape just in time, and disappear for years . . .

Five years later, Mercier receives an invitation to celebrate the birth of a new nation state: the principality of Schliffkopf, and he discovers that the Chancellor and his wife are none other than . . . Dolfi and Marilyn! Reinhard Gentschel, a centenarian billionaire hopelessly nostalgic for the Third Reich, has a diabolical plan to create an eternal Reich. Will it be possible to stop him?

One January day, Marko Voronine and three Ukrainian friends leave their country in the back of a lorry heading for France. Normally, the journey takes a few hours, but the Romanian people-smugglers decide to have a bit of fun with a young girl on board. The four Ukrainians overpower them, take back the money they had paid and the truck for good measure. But they know that the Romanian mafia won't leave it at that. The only way to escape them is to go separate ways. Marko heads for Brittany. He finds work on a fishing boat on the island of Belz. On the 'island of madmen' as they call it in the region, the inhabitants have no greater terror than a sign from the 'Ankou', the Angel of Death. When a crime is committed, the islanders suspect Marko of having aroused Ankou. The young fugitive has his work cut out to prove his innocence, steer clear of both the Romanian killers and the French police, find out the truth and chase off his own demons...

During the Great War, an aristocratic officer and a Corsican soldier, stuck in a shell-hole during a bombardment, make a pact: if they get out of this alive, Calixte and Léon will take to the high seas and become pirates.

The War has been over for 3 years and Calixte has returned home to his family but he finds it hard to settle down again after the horrors of the war. Léon, now back in Marseilles, has fallen foul of the local mafia. The two men meet up again and decide to sell contraband arms to the Moroccan rebels of the Rif region who are rebelling against the occupying Spanish forces. They succeed in earning the rebels' respect and crisscross the Rif in a drive to recruit soldiers to their cause. But the triumph of our 'Djebel Princes' is short-lived.

Calixte is killed during an attack on the French camp. So Léon returns to Corsica, where, many years later, he recounts his adventures to his grandson.

Jazz Maynard is a talented trumpet player and a full time robber. In order to save his sister from a life of drugs and prostitution, he puts an end to 10 years on the run to return to El Raval.

There, he finds Teo, his best friend, who hasn't changed a bit.

He also faces Judas, the new Godfather of the Mafia, another childhood friend who's dating his first love: Lucia.

To restore order in the neighborhood, the trio manages to work together. Between gangland, with its shabby henchmen and stylish kingpins, we are taken on a frantic chase from the slimiest parts of the Ghetto to the most exclusive places in the City.

Jazz soon works out who's pulling the strings and the reason why he's here: everything has been orchestrated to bring him back and use his skills as a robber. But the trumpet player has more than one tune in his repertoire and he intends to play them out to the very end.

A thriller with as much rhythm in the narrative as the main character himself. Set in a contemporary environment with a hushed atmosphere, reflecting the life of gangsters and jazz.

At the Lycée Notre-Dame du Nil, which stands on a summit, Belgian and Rwandan nuns educate the daughters of the country's elite, helped by young French people on their national service. On that same hill lives Monsieur de Fontenaille, an eccentric coffee planter who is fascinated by the Tutsi, believing them to be the descendants of the black pharaohs of Meroe. He paints the young Tutsi girls with passion, stigmatizing them even more when their presence in the school is only just tolerated. In this closed world, the government's call to 'deTutsify' institutions is heard loud and clear by the young 'patriots'. The Tutsi pupils are bullied even more than before, with the complicity of the chaplain, while mother superior pretends not to see... When the pupils claim to have been attacked during an outing by Tutsi rebels returned from exile, Veronica and Virginia know their days are numbered.

Les orchidées rouges de Shanghai traces the story of Kim Sangmi. Born into a wealthy family in Korea in 1923, when the country was under Japanese occupation, she grows up in a complex situation with her family. As a teenager, she learns from her grandfather that her real father is a Frenchman her mother was forbidden from marrying. We follow Sangmi's life over more than 10 years, from her abduction in 1937 to Japan's surrender in 1945. She is taken against her will several times and even deported. She remains a 'comfort woman', tossed back and forth from brothels to camps. From Shanghai to Hiroshima, this novel follows the destiny of a strong woman whose fate is tied to the history of Asia. In spite of being faced with the most horrendous hardships, Sangmi manages to pick herself up and rise to the occasion. After the attack on Hiroshima, she makes her way to Germany to finally take control of her life and set herself free.

A Machiavellian autocrat has decreed that the dreams of the entire nation must be laid bare, a ghastly plan to reduce individual citizens to servitude and to keep them under surveillance – even in their sleep. Mark-Alem, descendant of a noble family, is a lowly recruit at the dreaded Palace of Dreams. As he rises rapidly through the hierarchy, will he truly succeed in becoming its Master?

So what happened in those early autumn days of 1985? What is the truth behind Robert's tragic fate? Do we even know which Robert we are talking about? The dog or the stepfather? Maybe the grandmother Malou's diary will solve the mystery... or the statements made to the police by the second oldest child, Clarisse, and the parents, Frédéric and Katrin?
